

"Wait!" said the chief. "At what time yesterday did you come to this tree?"

"I stayed all day," Rides the Wind answered.

"Then we shall stay," the chief said. He did not smile, nor did he frown, but Rides the Wind was worried.

They all sat down on bearskin blankets at the foot of the tree and waited in silence.

